This book rests on the laurels of research done by many different collectors, collector communities, and public databases and websites. Mentioning them all would be too long a list. I've added a list of primary links and books in the Resources section.

I'd like to thank all the groups who did pain-staking research, and released that information to the public. This book is my own personal distillation of that, based on my own collecting preferences. You should track down the original sources for a much more thorough and in-depth look at these amazing pieces of plastic, metal, and imagination.

Preface

It all started with Bossk, as things often do.

Back in 2016, while rummaging around in Value Village (Savers in the US, a for-profit thrift chain modeled after Goodwill and The Salvation Army), I wandered to the toy aisle and found a vintage Kenner Bossk hiding in a bag of random toys. Price: $4. On a whim, I picked him up.

It triggered a memory. Before the Pantages theater in Toronto was restored, it spent time in the 70s and 80s as a movie theater called The Imperial Six. I saw many, many childhood favorites there: Empire Strikes Back, Return of the Jedi, most of the Indy films...my first Bond (For Your Eyes Only). I understand why it was restored to a live performance venue, but I really miss that movie theater.

My brother (much older and living in Calgary) was paying us a visit, and with my mom, we all went downtown to see The Raiders of the Lost Ark at The Imperial Six. Beside the theater is The Eaton Centre, one of Toronto's largest malls, anchored at the time by 2 now-defunct department stores: Simpson's at one end and Eaton's at the other. We ate at the food court and shopped to while away the time before the show.

Of course, I wanted to see the toy departments. During his visit, my brother bought me a Dengar, and my mom bought me a Fast 111's (a die-cast car line whose gimmick was randomized license plates... no two were alike, they claimed).

It was a good day. And while Bossk isn't Dengar, it got me thinking about all of the many, many toys I had in childhood, and some of the more vivid memories I had of stores, birthdays, holidays, and weird happenstances that contributed to that collection.

My mom was Kondo before Kondo was even alive, so all my childhood toys were eventually purged by my early teens. I was given a choice: my comics or my toys...one had to go. I chose comics.

While I don't regret that decision, it was brutal to find out how much some of the things I had as a kid are worth now.

Bossk kicked off an adventure that's lasted 7 years. During that time, I've had to accept that some things are beyond my reach, but there's always the "beater bins", buckets of treasure waiting to be rescued, restored, and loved again.

When I started this trip in 2016, I made a promise to myself: only buy what you love, buy as low as you can (even if that means getting beaters), and buy loose. Toys are meant to be played with and handled. While “play” at my age means display cases, it’s still play.

Going through thrift shops, toy shows, conventions, and all the various ways to re-acquire my childhood, I inevitably bought things I already owned. I knew I needed a better solution than my crusty memory if I wanted to avoid that in the future.

Enter the genesis for this book. It started with a small list of toy lines and grew, and grew, and grew...and really grew. I had to draw a line in the sand somewhere, and this is it. Maybe someday I'll have a complete list, but not today.

You'll notice that this book almost exclusively covers 1:18 scale figures, or 3.75" (9.525 cm for the Metric crowd). I had a few Transformers and some figures in other scales, but I fell in love with 3.75 early. It was the perfect size to fit into pockets and pencil cases, smuggling them out of the house for recess, trips, and after-school adventures.

While many other scales had figures available from multiple franchises, the overwhelming variety of genres available to a kid in 3.75" from the mid-70s to the mid-90s was staggering. Zorro could fence with Vader. Han could hang out with Batman. Starbuck and Luke could hang out on The Love Boat. It was fertile ground for a kid's imagination...we really didn't worry about copyright and studio rights in our backyards.

Of course I'll never own all all of these. I doubt I'll get past a quarter of this list. It's been exhausting compiling all of this information, but worth it for the joy of digging through websites, old books, and having my memory jogged by all of these wonderful toys.

Enjoy the book.

Jeff Wyonch.

Introduction

This list comprises more than 2,000 action figures and their accessories, across over 75 distinct lines and almost 40 companies, from 1975 to 2021. There is an extensive set of indexes at the back that help explore what is and isn't listed.

I haven't listed playsets, vehicles, accessory sets, known prototypes, or anything beyond the figures themselves. I don't have the space or money for those big-ticket purchases. If a toy line comes in multiple scales (Micronauts, for example), I've only listed the 3.75" figures. When I make an exception, I explain why in the toy line's entry.

It's organized by broad categories, such as Horror, Science Fiction, Film & TV, etc. A few of the larger franchises are broken out into their own categories.

After the figures, I've listed out merchandise that's closely tied to the toy lines that I collect, like trading cards, mini-comics, View Master reels, etc.

How to Use This Book

The Table of Contents lists all toy lines covered in this volume.

There is an index covering toy lines, their manufacturers, media associated with the toy line (if any), and live-action actors who portrayed the roles the toys are based on. There's also an extensive index covering G.I. Joe characters, their first comic appearances, and how many figures were made of each character.

Conventions Used in This Book

Most of the toy lines contain their own introductions, detailing the decisions I made on how to document the line and any quirks that line has.

At the beginning of each entry, I list the company name, years the toy line was released, scale (or approximate scale), the number of waves (W: 1), and the total number of released figures (F: 25).

Star Wars

Kenner produced the iconic vintage series of toys for Star Wars, in multiple scales. Hasbro was given the license in the 1990's and produced a second figure line named Power of the Force, which was received with mixed results from fans. Hasbro has continued to be the main producer of Star Wars figures since.

Beater, Loose, Incomplete

Star Wars – Kenner

Kenner. 1978-85. 1:18. W: 9. F: 104.

All figures feature solid construction.

Some figures were re-issued in The Power of the Force series with additional collector's coins, but otherwise are identical to previous releases. Several coins were issued for vehicles or cast ensembles, and not listed here. Although there are 4 distinct R2-D2 figures in the line, only 1 coin was issued (with the pop-up lightsaber version). All coins for the original Kenner 78-85 line are silver.

Both the A-Wing Pilot and Boba Fett were included in the figure assortment for Star Wars: Droids, and I've added a note that they have different collector's coins issued. In addition, there were new Droids coins issued for those versions of C-3PO and R2-D2.

Coins are listed next to the figure's first release.

Figures that came with a playset are marked, but not all have been listed.

Major figure variations are listed under the figure's entry, and aren't counted towards the figure total above.

In many cases, proper character names were unknown (eg. Walrus Man, Hammerhead) at the time. I've added these to the character names.

Star Wars: The Power of The Force 2

Hasbro\Kenner. 1995-2000. 1:18. W: 6. F: 224.

All figures feature solid construction.

Hasbro bought Kenner prior to releasing this line, and initially marketed it under that brand. Because Kenner released the last 2 waves of Star Wars figures under the name "The Power of The Force" after Return of the Jedi was released, but this line has the same name, it is referred to by collectors as "The Power of The Force 2".

The Power of The Force 2 contains the first figures of characters introduced in the Special Edition edits of the original trilogy, as well as figures based on production concepts and Expanded Universe/Legends content. It also contained the first figures released for The Phantom Menace.

Jeff Wyonch

Hasbro didn't release figures in traditional waves, instead releasing figures on different cardbacks or in sets (movie scenes, non-canon accessories, or with vehicles). The figures below are listed by year then sub-group, with each year as a wave.

The same figure would often be released multiple times with different packaging. If the accessories are different, this is noted.

There was a re-release on launch of 4 classic Kenner figures from the 1978-85 line: Chewbacca, Darth Vader, Han Solo (1978) and Luke Skywalker (Tatooine). The copyright stamp is different on these figures. They aren't listed here.

As the line progressed, Commtech Chips were introduced, which would speak lines of dialogue when combined with a reader device (sold separately). There were also "freeze frames", film cells that could be partially animated. These aren't listed, as many figures were issued with or without them.

In addition, Hasbro released many premium figures, exclusives, mail-aways and limited releases. These are listed at the end.

Star Trek

Star Trek has not fared well in the 1:18 scale, with only 3 figure lines available in vintage. Playmates would go to great success with a 5" line in the 1990's, and Mego had great success with larger scales in the 1970's, but Star Trek hasn't had much luck with 3.75".

Beater, Loose, Incomplete

Star Trek the Motion Picture

Mego. 1979-80. 1:18. W: 2. F: 12.

All figures have solid construction and only two came with accessories.

Wave 1 1979

- Kirk
- Decker
- Ilia
- McCoy
- Spock
- Scotty

Wave 2 1980

- Arcturian
- Betelgeusian

Star Trek

Playmates. 1992-99. 1:12 Scale (4.5"). W: 8. F: 259.

All figures feature solid construction, and were molded in a scale similar to Playmates Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles line, but with less exaggerated physiques.

Playmates didn't release figures in traditional waves, instead varying the packaging according to television series or movies. The figures below are listed by year then sub-group. Each year is considered a "wave".

In addition, Playmates released many premium figures, exclusives, mail-aways and limited releases. These are listed at the end.

Almost all figures were released with a display stand, and either a trading card or pog. Only the display stand is listed in the accessories.

Figures wearing an outfit that appeared in a single episode or movie have the episode or film listed.

Only 1 figure, Captain Mackenzie Calhoun, was not based on a live-action actor, but only appeared in novels.

Military

Military-themed toys and figures came roaring back in the 80's with a vengeance. Along with Star Wars, G.I. Joe dominated the 1980's toy aisles, with hundreds of figures and vehicle sets produced. Dozens of derivative and knock-off lines swiftly followed, Remco and Lanard producing the bulk of them. As the slacker decade approached, they all started to run out of ammo, but have seen brief resurgences in the 21st century.

G.I. Joe A Real American Hero

Hasbro. 1982-94. 1:18. W: 13. F: 525.

Almost all figures have o-ring construction, with a few exceptions. Several figures have action features.

Figures are organized by faction, sub-team, and whether they shipped carded or with vehicles/playsets.

Characters were re-issued often, sometimes with different military specialties, or added to different sub-teams (Rock 'n Roll had 5 different vintage figures, for instance). To track versions, I'm using the versioning information used by yojoe.com.

All figures were released with a file card, listing their names, specialties and biographies. This is listed as an accessory. Details were often changed based on the country the figure was issued in (Rock 'n Roll's birthplace was changed from Malibu, California to Ottawa, Canada, for instance).

From 1983 to 1988, Hasbro re-issued accessories as "Battle Gear" packs...these typically contained some accessories from the previous year's figures in different coloured plastic. If Battle Gear accessories were issued for a figure, I list original release accessories as "carded" and re-issues as "Battle Gear". If a carded accessory isn't listed under Battle Gear, it was never re-issued that way.

All figures in the 1982 release were missing the "battle grip" point of articulation.

ReAction

A recent line started by Funko and taken over by Super 7, ReAction is a throwback to the chunky, limited articulation of the Star Wars line. They produce figures for multiple franchises under the ReAction banner, as well as multiple convention and store exclusive figures, making this line difficult to collect.

Because ReAction loses its licenses as fast as it gains them, reliable information on the whole toy line is spotty.

Reaction – Funko

Funko. 2013-2017. 1:18. W: 35. F: 241.

All figures have solid construction.

Reaction figures are made to resemble vintage 70s 5 POA figures, but are based on both modern and vintage movie and television franchises. Funko started the line in 2014, and the brand was transferred to Super7 in 2018. This list only covers Funko-issued Reaction figures.

Because Reaction has so many sub-lines, the list is organized in this way, alphabetically by franchise.

Alien 2013-2015

Funko released the first wave exclusively at SDCC with blue cards. The clear alien and alien/Kane prototypes were never released on regular cards.

Super Heroes

The 1970's were the last decade in which a toy company could produce both Marvel and DC figures in the same toy line, and Mego made the most of it in multiple scales, including 2 1:18 lines. The 1980's produced the iconic Secret Wars and Super Powers line, in slightly larger scales than 3.75". While DC has seen sporadic figure lines since then, mostly based off the Batman mythos, Hasbro has produced several large lines of Marvel figures in multiple scales. The less said about the Toy Biz years, the better.

Indiana Jones – Hasbro

Hasbro. 2008-2011. 1:18. W: 6. F: 42.

All figures feature solid construction. Most figures came with a 'relic', something Indiana Jones was seeking in the various films.

Several figures were released with vehicles.

There were separate waves for each of the 4 films.

Fantasy

The science fantasy, action sequences and special effects of Star Wars sparked a flood of both fantasy and science-fiction related movies, television, comics, and more in the 1980's. The success of Dungeons and Dragons helped cement the fantasy genre with a solid toy line, just slightly larger than 1:18 scale.

Advanced Dungeons & DragonsLJN. 1983-84. 1:12. W: 2. F: 26.

All figures have solid construction. All 'shield shooter' figures had a shield with a removable part, but was based on the original mold for the solid shield when the figure was released earlier. All 'battle-matic' figures were re-issues of figures from the first wave with an action feature built into them.

Science Fiction

Science fiction came raging back in the late 70's and early 80's, dominating the both the box office and the small screen. Sadly, many of these toy lines didn't expand, as Star Wars sucked all the oxygen out of them before they had a chance to breathe.

Masudaya Robots

Masudaya. 1985-1997. 1:18. W: 1. F: 4.

Masudaya is a Japanese company known primarily for stamped tin toys, often featuring wind-up action features. In the 1980s they released plastic versions of classic movie and TV robots that are in scale with 3.75" figures. All of them had wind-up walking action.

The figures were re-released in the 1990s with updated packaging, but the figure was the same mold.

All figures feature solid construction, and had no accessories.

Wave 1 1985

- Robby the Robot
- YM-3 (Lost in Space B-9 robot)

Wave 2 1997

- Robby the Robot
- YM-3 (Lost in Space B-9 robot)

Metal-Man

Zee Toys/Zylmex. 1976-80. 1:18. W: 5. F: 7.

All figures are die-cast and riveted o-ring construction.

These figures were released in many different forms, each coming with unique accessories. To this end, only the figures are listed in a single wave.

The figures were either human or robots. I've listed humans first, then the robots.

Humans

- Corporal Chrome
- Major Mercury
- Rescueman
- Sergeant Silver

Robots

- Questar
- Radon
- Roton

Micronauts

Mego. 1976-81. 1:18. W: 5. F: 35.

Mego licensed several different toy lines from Japan and released them under the same banner with a new back story, similar to what Hasbro did with The Transformers line in the 1980's. The result is a toy line with figures in multiple scales and mold types. For the last few waves, Mego released their own designs along with Japanese molds.

Only the 3.75" figures are listed, along with their accessories. The mold type is listed next to the figure.

The last wave was mostly distributed in Italy.

Horror

Vintage horror lines in 3.75" were few and far between, and mainly featured the 'classic' Universal Monster line-up. They were definitely more successful in larger scales. The few figures that exist in smaller scales made up for this with some awesome sculpts.

Creature Crypts

Taco Bell/KFC. 2003. 1:18. W: 1. F: 7.

Creature Crypts was released by Taco Bell in the US and KFC in the UK. The figures that were only released in one country are marked.

Each figure came with a spring-loaded crypt that raises the figures out of them. This is the only accessory, and all featured limited articulation and solid construction.

The bat is a pre-school toy not in scale with other figures, and had no accessories.

Doctor Who

Dapol picked up the Doctor Who license in the 90s, and produced a small amount of figures with an almost endless supply of variants, particularly of Daleks. When Doctor Who was brought back to air in the 21st century, the British company Character Options picked up the line, and produced a much larger selection of characters from across the entirety of the Who canon.

Doctor Who – Dapol

Dapol. 1988-2002. 1:18. W: 1. F: 73.

All figures featured solid construction. Several had no articulation, and were figurines. A large amount of daleks had a pull-back friction motor.

Figures were released in only a few waves. The bulk of the figures and variants are store exclusives or tied to an event (ie, Christmas or anniversaries). Because figures were released so often and in so many variations, I'm listing the figures as a single wave.

Only a few figures had accessories.

Film and Television

Not to be left behind in the franchise gold rush of the 80's, many TV shows ended up with 1:18 toy lines as well. Recently, many classic B-movies have also seen small figure assortments released. And, correcting a long-standing injustice to 3.75" aficionados, Steve Austin has joined the ranks of the smaller scale.

A-Team.

Galoob. 1984. 1:18. W: 1. F: 15.

The A-Team was originally distributed in a 4-pack. The outfits in that pack were blue (Hannibal), light green (B.A.), black (Face), and orange (Murdock). Variants were released with vehicles or playsets. The A-Team was o-ring and the 4 bad guys solid construction.

Civilians

A catch-all category for figures made to reflect day-to-day reality. From firefighters to paramedics, reporters to divers, bush pilots to truck drivers, these figures often came with vehicles and play environments allowing children to act out their “dream jobs”, and great effort was made to ensure there was both educational as well as play value. These vintage lines were among the first action figures to have appeal in both the boys and girls aisles, and are often fondly remembered by adults.

Adventure People

Fisher Price. 1975-1985. 1:18. W: 11. F: 77.

The Adventure People line was created by Fisher-Price to be educational toys, designed to appeal to both girls and boys. Information on the line is spotty, but collectors generally agree that the line started sometime in 1975-76 and ended around 1985.

The figures were often distributed first with vehicles, play environments, or carded with accessories designed to emulate a specific occupation or adult activity (jungle safari, paramedic rescue, civilian pilot, deep sea divers, etc). Because the same figures could be packaged with different accessories depending on theme, they are not listed here.

Because figures were often re-released with different accessories and different paint jobs, I'm listing each year as an individual wave above, but not listing figures by year below.

Later in the line's development, figures were released on their own without accessories on 2 types of cards: a generic tan card, and a larger illustrated card.

Adventure People often re-used existing pieces in different combinations and colours.

Several figures have been found by collectors for which no information exists. They are believed to be prototypes or internal company rewards/experiments, and aren't listed here.

All figures featured solid construction.

I've organized the figures below into broad categories.

Play People

Tonka. 1979-1981. 1:18. W: 2. F: 26.

Play People were similar in design and function to Fisher-Price Adventure People: figures that based on adult occupations and activities, often shipped with vehicles or playsets. Tonka often applied the Tonka logo onto figures.

Tonka offered a smaller figure selection, often re-issuing a figure in different coloured plastic multiple times to reflect different occupations. They also partnered with professional racers and other companies to offer branded toys.

Figures below are organized by general body type, then by occupation and colour combinations.

All figures featured solid construction.

“Service Man”

Man with mustache, wearing a service uniform and baseball cap.

- Army Truck Driver - solid green uniform/cap
- Man (Blue Uniform) - light blue shirt, dark blue pants/cap
- Phone Repairman - tan uniform/cap

Beater, Loose, Incomplete

- ___ A.J. Foyt Indy Race Team Pit Crew - beige uniform, red cap

Man with t-shirt, pants, and hard hat

- ___ Construction Worker - navy shirt/pants, yellow hard hat
- ___ Construction Crew - light blue shirt/pants, yellow hard hat
- ___ Rapid Deployment Team - light green shirt, dark green pants and hard hat

“Fireman”

Same body mold with 2 different head sculpts, one African-American and one white.

- ___ Hook & Ladder Team (Black)
- ___ Hook & Ladder Team (White)

“Repair Man”

Slightly slimmer mold than the Service Man, jacket over shirt and pants, no hat.

- ___ Man - solid orange uniform, Tonka logo on chest
- ___ Mr. Goodwrench - white jacket, blue shirt/pants, Mr. Goodwrench logo on chest
- ___ U.S. Army Medic - solid white uniform, black belt, US Army first aid logo on chest
- ___ Rapid Deployment Team - solid green uniform, brown hair, painted mustache

“Service Woman”

Short-haired woman in zippered jacket and slacks, no hat

- ___ Woman - solid navy uniform, blonde hair
- ___ Woman - solid tan uniform, blonde hair

“Motorcyclist”

Racing helmet, leather jacket and pants, gloves, and articulated knees

- ___ Cycle Team - solid black uniform/helmet with white stripes on jacket
- ___ Racing Team - solid black uniform, red gloves/helmet

Jeff Wyonch

“Pilot”

- __ Flight jacket and gloves, pants, baseball cap with sunglasses and headphones
- __ Flight Squadron - solid white uniform, blue gloves/cap, green sunglasses
- __ Rapid Deployment Team - solid green uniform/cap, black gloves, silver sunglasses

Single figures

- __ Cowboy
- __ Cowgirl
- __ Man (White Shirt / Blue Shorts)
- __ Woman (Red Shirt / Red Shorts)
- __ Pilot - this pilot had a leather hat and goggles, with a scarf and high-top boots
- __ A.J. Foyt Racing Team - similar sculpt to Motorcyclist, but with no knee articulation. Solid white uniform with red gloves/helmet.

Books

There are lots of books cherished and treasured in the childhood of many Gen X'ers, myself included. This list is a big hodge-podge of current, vintage, and slightly off-center books I collect.

Little Golden Books

Started in 1942, Little Golden Books are for younger children, featuring educational stories. The “classic” format is hardcover in almost-square proportions, with a golden spine. Below are the titles published during the 70s and 80s that have corresponding toy lines.

- The Black Hole A Spaceship Adventure For Robots. 1979.
- Buck Rogers and the Children Of Hopetown. 1979.
- Land of the Lost The Surprise Guests. 1975.
- The Wizard of Oz. 1975.
- The Road To Oz. 1951.
- The Tin Woodman of Oz. 1952.
- The Emerald City of Oz. 1952.
- Return To Oz Dorothy Saves the Emerald City. 1985.
- Return To Oz Escape From the Witch's Castle. 1985.

The How and Why Wonder Books

The How and Why Wonder Books were a series of illustrated non-fiction children's books released between 1960 and 1976. They were mainly on science, history and nature topics.

They were released in both North America (Grosset & Dunlap) and the United Kingdom (Transworld Publishers of London) with slightly different title lists. The UK editions would often revise portions of the NA copy to better fit the educational needs of the UK market; those revised editions are noted.

The series was issued in both soft and hardcover in a variety of formats in different markets (schools, libraries and bookstores). Below only the softcover bookstore editions are listed. The last set of North American books were issued with photo covers instead of artwork...these are indicated.

Below the North American number is listed first, followed by the UK number. If a UK title is issued with multiple text revisions, both numbers are listed.

View-Master Reels

View-Master reels came in many different formats and reel counts. A square paper package with 3 reels and an optional instruction booklet or catalog was the most common format, but blister packs, boxes, and other promotional formats exist. The same set of reels was often re-issued in new packaging if it was popular.

Below is a list of View-Master reels without reference to a specific package format, only its catalog number. If the same reels were issued with different catalog numbers, those are listed in sequence. Reels from a single franchise are grouped together.

I haven't listed any reels for comics or Universal Monsters because of the sheer volume.

Film Storybooks

These books were loosely published between multiple publishers and imprints, starting in 1977 with the Star Wars Storybook. They were often issued in both hardcover and trade paperback, and were magazine-sized.

They were a combination of retelling the film in prose and still photographs from the film, sometimes incorporating deleted scenes and details from novelizations and early script drafts.

Below is a partial list without publishers, format or ISBN.

G.I. Joe A Real American Hero – Indexes

Characters

Individual characters are listed alphabetically by codename. The year of release is listed afterwards. If the figure was released multiple times in the same year, the year is repeated.

Storm Shadow is listed under both G.I. Joe and Cobra. He is the only character to switch sides and join the Joes.

Beater, Loose, Incomplete

Listed is the first appearance of the character in the 2 Marvel comics series G.I. Joe (ARAH) and G.I. Joe Special Missions (SM). If no appearance is listed, the character was never part of those books.

Glossary

Action figure value terms

MOC — Mint On Card

MLC — Mint Loose and Complete

MISB — Mint In Sealed Box

MIB — Mint In Box

MISP — Mint In Sealed Package

Beater — Figure with enough defects as to be considered almost worthless. Beaters are often childhood toys kept for sentimental value or purchased to “fill in” a part of a collection until a better figure is procured.

Action figure scales

1:4 Scale (approx. 18")

1:6 Scale (approx. 12")

1:9 Scale (approx. 8")

1:10 Scale (approx. 7")

1:12 Scale (approx. 5-6")

1:18 Scale (approx. 3.75-4")

1:48 Scale (approx. 2")

Action figure construction

Accessory — Anything that comes with the figure (gun, sword, cape) or can be detached from the figure (backpack, clothing).

Action feature — Some figures will come built-in springs, motors, and even electronics requiring batteries.

Backpack peg holes — Figures with o-ring construction often had a torso hole in the back where the screw was located, and this was used to allow backpacks and other accessories to be added to the figure. Early examples include Mego Micronauts and Zee Toys Metal Man.

Beater, Loose, Incomplete

Build-a-figure (BAF) — In an effort to get a consumer to purchase an entire wave or group of figures, separate pieces of an additional figure will be distributed among all the figures of that wave or group. The Marvel Legends 6" line is famous (or notorious) for this tactic.

Custom — Any figure that was built at home from scratch, or a figure intentionally modified to become another character. Construction methods vary from completely new molds or 3-d printing to a simple re-paint.

Die-cast — Metal is shaped using a mold and riveted (occasionally screwed) into place. More often used in cars like Hot Wheels.

Figurine — No moving parts...essentially a statue.

Flocked/Flocking — Short fibers deposited in a uniform pattern across the surface of a figure and held in place with adhesive. Produces a “furry” texture.

Foot peg holes — Started by Kenner with the 3.75" Star Wars line, holes were left in the soles of action figures, allowing them to be slotted into dioramas and figure stands. Vintage figures often had larger foot peg holes than modern figures, as there was no cross-company standard followed.

Glow-in-the-dark — Plastic made with an added material that absorbs light. Figures will continue to glow for some time after light sources are removed.

O-ring — The torso is hollow, containing a rubber o-ring that links together the parts...the torso is either screwed shut, riveted shut, or sealed.

Rooted hair — Thin plastic wires stitched directly into a figure to emulate natural hair. Barbie and other fashion dolls use this technique more than action figures.

Solid — All parts are solid plastic and/or metal solid pieces, sealed or riveted together at the torso.

Sprue — Sprues are a plastic frame that is used to connect and distribute small parts. More prevalent in plastic model kits, but sometimes accessories for figures are packed this way (notably the original

Jeff Wyonch

Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles line by Playmates). Often called runners as well.
